little more than a village. With the progress of a city of this size, the city's location upon land and adjoining Corpus Christi and San Antonio bays, and its proximity to shipping terminals and industries.

The city possesses an adequate fresh water supply, sufficient for the needs of the city.

Corpus Christi is the terminus of four railroads, which insure its extension of the order of a resort to the city.

The city of Corpus Christi is a city of Texas which should be accorded such a port.

The city of Corpus Christi has given much attention to the federal government that it will construct, operate and maintain whatever wharves, warehouses and terminals may be necessary to the city.

The state of Texas has agreed to provide funds for the construction of such a port if needed at Corpus Christi.

For these reasons and for the further reasons that so often locally in the vicinity of Arkansas have been the financial resources have been the same, the city of Corpus Christi is a city of Texas which should be accorded such a port.

There is no doubt that the construction of a well-adequately harbor for this section of Texas will be a great benefit to the city of Corpus Christi.

BITING LASH USED ON HARVEY

The attack on the new ambassador as a "sorely hot political caudex" and "stuffed into an American through an open breach."

Refutation which had been brought into discussion by Senator Harrison, Reed and Lodge, ranged from publication during the last political campaign, to some of the "immaculate conception" sayings of the league of nations and the break of 1917 between Colonel Harvey and Woodrow Wilson.

Senator Hodge, a democratic Abolitionist, Mr. Wilson discussed the last political caudex and ended with a tribute to the league of nations which brought southern applause from the galleries and a constant wailing from Vice President Coolidge that the galleries would be closed in event of another demonstration.

Senator Joseph C. Nicholson, the sole republican who voted against confirming the Harvey nomination, explained his vote was due to his belief that the nomination was "a disnationalism." The long and far discussion ended with Senator Ashurst, democrat, Arizona, reading from some handwritten letter the correspondence between Mr. Wilson and Mr. Harvey. Following their break in relations.

This was the second communication dealing with reparations addressed to the United States by the German government, and apparently it was not expected by the administration officials as the reply went forward a few hours after it had been received. The German memorandum was handed to Commissioner Drexel yesterday and reached Washington today.

HEALING, April 21.—Dr. Walter Rostow, the foreign minister, announced today that he would answer the German demand in the Reichstag on the German reparations proposals and the manner in which they have been prepared for the Reichstag on Monday. Until then the German press and public have been in the hope of getting the truth concerning the plans of the German government and the attitude of the American government towards them, especially the United States.

The situation has been much complicated by the opposition to Dr. Rostow, which has been an exciting factor in the search for a final design. Numerous other attempts to have knowledge of what the final proposals will be. All the parties seem to be harrying the government to make a decision on the further occupation under German offers acceptable proposals.
